WOMEN IN Franchising
A Look at the Leaders Influencing the Franchise Business Model

FBR Research Insights Issue No. 3: April 2017
In this issue of FBR Research Insights we focus on women as a driving force behind the growth of franchising. According to a recent report from the U.S. Department of Commerce’s International Trade Association’s 2016 Top Markets Report, franchise businesses continue to grow faster than the rest of the U.S. economy.

One of the factors contributing to franchising’s growing role in the U.S. economy is the fact that the very perception of the industry itself is slowly shifting. Franchising is no longer associated with just fast-food chains. Today there are innovative concepts that offer franchisees flexibility AND the tools and support to make their business a success—making them extremely attractive to women looking to franchising as a path to business ownership while still maintaining a balance between work and life.

Franchises looking to attract female franchisees need to be able to do more than promise flexibility and work/life balance. If you want to create a system of satisfied franchisees, there are three key things you need to do:

1. Be realistic about what your “female-friendly” business can offer. It is not realistic with any concept for franchisees to think they are going to build a thriving business that pays their bills working “mom’s hours.” Be realistic with prospective franchisees about what they can expect if they work part-time in the business and when they might make enough money to start taking a salary. If their business is growing, franchisees may need to sacrifice their personal salary even longer so they can hire someone to help manage that growth.

2. Connect your franchisees with others LIKE THEM. Perhaps the most important resource franchisors can provide to franchisees is contact with other franchisees—particularly other franchisees who are like them. It’s not enough just to connect franchisees to others in their area or who are at the same point of growth. Connect them with people who share similar life situations and can provide ideas for balancing life commitments with work.

3. Don’t oversell it. If your franchise brand is trying to recruit women owners, don’t paint a picture that is too rosy—that is, unrealistically flexible, prosperous, or whatever it is you think will attract women to the opportunity. Attracting female franchisees is only part of your battle; you must be able to actually support them when they are up and running. With that said, even with franchise opportunities that are time intensive, franchisees can still benefit from the ability to structure their time around their own needs.

As franchising continues to grow and evolve, we want to highlight some of the women who are forging a path in our evolving industry through their leadership, knowledge, and creativity. We asked the franchise industry to nominate the women they believe are leading franchising, and the response we received was overwhelming. All of them are thoughtful, dedicated, strong, and inspiring leaders, and I feel lucky to call many friends and clients.

Read on to see the results, along with resources, data, and advice from franchisors for building a stronger, more profitable system.

Insights from FBR’s 2017 Research on Women Franchisees

METHODOLOGY

| 300 brands | 6,400 female franchisees | THIRTY THREE benchmark questions |

When franchisors seek out feedback from their franchisees—and act upon it—they generate satisfaction and engagement.

- 84% respect their franchisor
- 90% enjoy operating their business
- 85% would recommend their franchise brand to others
- 74% would “do it again” knowing what they know today

Men and women are closely aligned on flexibility, and number of hours worked is consistent.

FLEXIBILITY

There is just a 3% gap between men and women when asked about the flexibility of their work schedule.

- 68% of females report that their schedule is “flexible” or “very flexible”:
- 65% of males

More women say their work schedule is “very flexible” and more men say “flexible”.

“Find out if the franchise you are considering surveys its franchisees.”

- Victoria Schafer, TSS Photography franchisee

“When you are considering a particular franchise ask to speak to their franchisees to find out their experience.”

- Michelle Spitzer, multi-unit MaidPro franchisee
HOURS
The median weekly hours worked for both genders is 40-50 hours.

44: Mean hours worked by females
49: Mean hours worked by males

FINANCIAL EXPECTATIONS
58% of women say their financial expectations are being met vs 62% of men.

While men and women are closely aligned on financial expectations being met, there is a significant gap in income.

INCOME
Women earn significantly less than men, but are almost twice as likely to work part-time.

Report that they work fewer than 30 hours per week:
19% of females | 11% of males

Mean pre-tax income:

- Female: $62,721
- Male: $97,466

Mean pre-tax income for single-unit owners only:
- Female: $51,720
- Male: $75,222

*64% of men and 72% of women are single unit owners.

“I love the flexibility being self-employed provides and knowing that the harder I work, the luckier I get.”
— Tracy Panase, Just Between Friends franchise

“I work from home, which means if my son has a sporting event, doctor appointment, or another activity I want to attend, I can schedule my hours around it.”
— Andrea Joyce, Dream Vacations franchise
The three sectors that attract female franchisees in the highest concentrations relative to males are among the bottom five in average pre-tax income. Travel & Hospitality is especially appealing to females: 12% of female franchisees completing our survey are in this sector, compared to just 3% of male franchisees.

“While opening up a new business is inherently a risky proposition, for me, by purchasing a franchise from a well-respected franchisor, I feel that I was able to reduce the amount of risk involved.”

– Susan Maranhao, Wild Birds Unlimited franchisee

Travel & Hospitality is especially appealing to females: 12% of female franchisees completing our survey are in this sector, compared to just 3% of male franchisees.

More women tend to choose franchises in sectors with a lower average pre-tax income.

Women value a system in which franchisees are supportive of each other.

“Between the training, online resources, availability of everyone at the home office and the amazing network of fellow franchise owners, I can always find what I need. There is great comfort in knowing that support is right there at all times no matter what the issue.”

– Mary Worthington, Home Instead Senior Care franchisee

Women value a system in which franchisees are supportive of each other.

While there is no significant difference in flexibility or hours worked, men make nearly twice as much as women. However, more women own franchises in industry sectors that have a lower average income overall. Men and women are closely aligned when asked if their business is meeting their financial expectations, and a whopping 90% of women say they enjoy operating their business, suggesting that female franchisees, more often than male franchises, seek opportunities that fit their lifestyle and interests with a lower priority given to maximizing earnings potential. This reaffirms franchises that create a culture of support and set appropriate expectations are likely to have more satisfied franchisees, even if they don’t provide the highest average franchisee income.
Franchise Like a Girl: Build Relationships, Embrace Community, Empower Others

By Nancy Bigley, CFE

Nancy Bigley is the CEO of Bottle & Bottega and the Chair of the IFA's Women's Franchise Committee.

Like many of you, I recently attended the IFA’s Convention in Las Vegas. I returned feeling energized and inspired by the many networking conversations, fascinating keynotes, and educational sessions. I am proud to see so many women in leadership roles, sharing their expertise with the franchise community and steering the future of the franchising model.

Franchise Business Review’s recent report on the Top Franchises for Women talks about why women excel as franchisees. For one, women place a high value on relationships and two, they’re connected and engaged with their communities.

Women excel as franchise professionals for the same reason. The IFA’s Women’s Franchise Committee is dedicated to nurturing those incredible qualities through our local Women’s Franchise Networks (WFNs) and our annual Leadership Conference held during the IFA Convention.

The Women’s Franchise Committee and WFNs work tirelessly to create opportunities for women in franchising to develop relationships, further their careers, and engage with other women in the franchise community and in their local communities. Through the Dress for Success initiative, WFNs host events across the country for women franchisors to socialize, network, and have fun—all to support underprivileged women in their communities by providing them with professional attire, and the confidence that comes with it, to take the first step toward economic independence.

I have met so many amazing women, role models, and mentors through the Women’s Franchise Committee, all of them willing to support each other, celebrate successes, and share ideas. The relationships I have developed have enriched me both personally and professionally and have truly changed my life. If you have a local WFN, I strongly recommend you get involved and take advantage of this valuable resource, and if you don’t, I encourage you to start one!

You can learn more about the Women’s Franchise Committee and find a list of WFNs on the IFA’s website. Or, feel free to reach out to me directly at nancy@bottleandbottega.com.
Women Leading Franchising

Franchise Business Review recently asked the franchise community to name the women who are positively impacting the franchise industry through exceptional leadership, knowledge, and creativity.

Each of the women nominated has been a driving force behind the success of their brand and their franchisees. Their influence ranges from management and services to franchise brands to mentoring, community service, and empowering entrepreneurship through franchising.

Following is the complete list of nominees with highlights selected by our editorial team based on compelling nominations and our own research. Our selections include pioneers in the industry, up and coming franchisors, and women who are growing franchising behind the scenes.

- Jennifer Anderson, Vice President, Marketing & Communications, Express Employment Professionals
- Tina Bacon-Defrece, President, Big Frog Custom T-Shirts
- Darlene Barnwell, Chief Creative Officer, Kids “R” Kids International
- Cynthia Berger, Vice President & Founder, You’ve Got Maids
- Susan Bith, COO, NRD Capital
- Nancy Bigley, CEO, Bottle & Bottega
- Clarissa Bradstock, CEO, Any Lab Test Now

Why Women Excel as Franchisees:
Three Franchisors Share Their Views

Women may still be the minority in franchising, but many have mastered the secret to success. Three leading franchisors share why women have been so successful in their systems.

“They understand the strength that comes from being part of a high achieving team. Because of this dynamic, they work hard to find solutions that meet the needs of the team and organization, even if it means great sacrifice for themselves. A healthy franchising system operates much like a family with deep, lasting relationships. All of our Rhea Lana's franchises are owned and operated by women. I personally find great joy working with our franchisees because they truly care about our brand and they understand the “sister lift” principle – that we grow our brand together.”

– Rhea Lana, Founder and CEO of Rhea Lana's

They are the ones who promote positivity and volunteer within their local schools, charities, and non-profits. From a business perspective, they are organized, responsive, creative, and excellent at marketing the business. Women want to leave their community better than they found it.”

– Tony Lamb, Founder and CEO of Kona Ice

Close to 75% of Kona Ice franchises are women co-owned and operated.

“...it is the woman of the family who is making many of the key decisions regarding a camping trip. The same holds true for a family franchising business.”

“...they truly care about our brand and they understand the “sister lift” principle – that we grow our brand together.”

“Although several of our franchises are owned solely by women, our most common ownership setup is a husband/wife team since our business model requires more than an eight to five commitment during peak seasons. Our research has always told us that, most often, it is the woman of the family who is making many of the key decisions regarding a camping trip. The same holds true for a family franchising business.”

– Mike Gast, Vice President of Communications, Kampgrounds of America
The Secret to 60% of Pinot Palette’s Franchisees Being Women

Charles Willis, President and Co-Founder of Pinot’s Palette, a paint and sip franchise headquartered in Houston, TX that offers group painting classes accompanied by wine or cocktails, shared with Franchise Business Review how the brand attracts female franchisees and leverages it’s franchisee satisfaction survey data to strengthen it’s competitive standing.

Pinot’s Palette has obtained system-strengthening insight regarding its franchisees by partnering with Franchise Business Review to survey them since 2012.

How many of Pinot’s Palette’s franchisees are female? We currently have 164 female owners in our system, making up about 60 percent of our total system.

How does Pinot’s Palette recruit female franchisees? We don’t specifically target female franchisees, however, the core customer demographic for Pinot’s Palette is women aged 25 to 55. The fun experience they have at our studios has resulted in many of our customers becoming interested in opening a Pinot’s Palette in their area. They found the flexibility that being a small business owner offers, as well as the fun nature of the paint and sip concept itself, attractive. This is why so many of our franchisees have left professional careers to open a Pinot’s Palette.

FRANCHISOR SPOTLIGHT

Why do you think women make for great franchisees? Women tend to be engaged in their local communities, like to socialize, and enjoy networking. These traits are particularly important when it comes to achieving success with Pinot’s Palette business model for a couple of reasons. Like a local coffee shop or wine bar, Pinot’s Palette is a social hot spot where area residents can convene to have a fun night out or to host a private party, so community visibility helps drive business. Studios also host corporate clients’ team building events and holiday parties, so developing connections in the business community is important. Additionally, our studios hold charity events to help raise awareness for local non-profit organizations, so having ties to those organizations helps bring in business and new customers.

Do you use your FBR franchisee satisfaction survey data in your recruitment process? Yes. There is no greater testament to the health of a franchise than the positive opinions of the franchise partners that comprise it. We encourage candidates to visit our profile on the Franchise Business Review website and to download the summary report of our Franchise Business Review survey data as part of their due diligence. It provides them with extensive insight regarding our system and leads to their asking great questions.

What do you do to keep your FBR franchisee satisfaction rankings high? Pinot’s Palette has consistently ranked #1 in franchisee satisfaction among other paint and sip franchises surveyed by the Franchise Business Review. This high ranking comes from our recruiting the right partners and providing transparency and support to our franchisees. We analyze our FBR data to identify what is most valuable and important to our franchise partners, as well as our strengths and areas where we need to improve.
